DOESN'T JUST HAPPEN

Teaching Aussie kids where their food comes from

MLA's free virtual classrooms – which have already been accessed by more than 10,000 students from over 450 schools – enable users to interact with red meat producers live on video stream. During these 'excursions', students can:

- see and hear what beef, lamb and goat producers do on-farm
- learn about sustainable farming, red meat nutrition and how their food is produced
- take part in fun, educational activities and quizzes
- interact with students from other schools.

Teachers and students can register at mlavirtualexcursions.com

Students can also learn about red meat sustainability through a three-part video series, Your Expert Classroom, which includes educational videos, in-home activities and a livestream Q&A with a producer.

Getting kids into the kitchen

Get Kids Cooking is an MLA program that teaches children ages 5–13 how to cook and appreciate nutritious food through cooking classes at schools and community events. It's also being adapted into an online video series to teach kids about the important role of red meat as part of healthy meals at home. Estimated launch date: later in term 2.

Our resources are carefully curated by teachers to align with the Australian curriculum and endorse fun and engaging teaching and learning experiences for teachers, home educators and their students.
